

Law Graduates

The most common feedback we receive from our graduates and junior lawyers about working at Allion is that they get to do quality, complex work well beyond what their peers are doing at other firms, including the larger national and international firms. Our lawyers are also given a higher level of responsibility much earlier in their careers as a result of working closely with our clients and our partners, which in turn accelerates their learning and assists them to develop a level of commerciality. Apart from the obvious career benefits that this approach provides, this type of working environment also delivers a high level of challenge, enjoyment and engagement.

Graduate positions are offered to students on the basis that they complete their College of Law (COL) studies prior to joining us full time. Allion meets the cost of the COL studies.

This means that depending upon your workload, you may choose to commence your COL studies part time (30 weeks) while still studying at university. Alternatively, you may prefer to finish your degree and then embark on your COL studies full time (15 weeks). Additional information on the COL course timetable is available at www.collaw.edu.au.
